It has been recognized for some time that B-cell lymphomas contain distinct immunoglobulin gene rearrangements, but there has been no agreement on how they should be classified into subtypes. Recent molecular biological and immunological studies have identified additional markers that are useful for the diagnosis of B-cell lymphomas, and the use of such markers in classifying B-cell lymphomas has been studied extensively. We have analyzed the gene rearrangements of 3 precursor B-cell lymphomas (B-cell prolymphocytic leukaemia, hairy cell leukaemia, and mantle cell lymphoma) using Southern blot hybridization and have found that, although the gene rearrangements are similar, the 3 subtypes have distinct rearrangement patterns of the variable region of the immunoglobulin genes. In the diffuse types of Burkitt lymphoma and Burkitt lymphoma/leukaemia with translocation t(8;14)(q24;q32), immunoglobulin gene rearrangements are also detected, suggesting that translocation t(8;14)(q24;q32) causes the disruption of a functional Ig locus. We have also analyzed the gene rearrangements of 10 large cell anaplastic lymphomas, which are a variant of diffuse large cell B-cell lymphoma, and our results suggest that the large cell anaplastic lymphomas may not be related to diffuse large cell B-cell lymphoma. Finally, we have studied the gene rearrangements in 3 nodal lymphomas, (follicular lymphoma, diffuse large B-cell lymphoma and mantle cell lymphoma) and these all display different rearrangement patterns. #!/bin/sh set -e export DYLD_INSERT_LIBRARIES=${DYLD_INSERT_LIBRARIES} 0cc13bf012

Inflammation plays a prominent role in the development of insulin resistance, and cytokines such as IL-6 are often elevated in overweight and obese individuals. However, it is not known whether IL-6 modulates insulin-stimulated signaling pathways. In this study, we observed that IL-6 treatment of human skeletal muscle cells inhibits the phosphorylation and activity of insulin-stimulated protein kinase B/Akt and also reduces the amount of phosphorylated insulin receptor beta subunit. Furthermore, we found that IL-6 treatment of L6 skeletal muscle cells inactivates phosphatidylinositol 3-kinase, which is required for Akt phosphorylation and activity. Finally, we observed that IL-6 treatment of mouse hindlimb muscle attenuated insulin-induced glucose uptake. These findings provide evidence that IL-6 may modulate insulin-stimulated signaling pathways in
