Popularization and application of electronic engineering technology in the field of robotics have made it possible to create a robot capable of truly being an embodied life to be which can act as a labor slave and carry out work. The robot can be, for example, a personal assistant robot that answers a call made by a person at home or an unmanned service robot that handles goods according to a command from a person and that is configured to perform specific work. Recently, such service robots have been developed that operate in a shopping mall or factory and perform a work task with the help of a user's gesture command, as well as being capable of providing an attentive service, as a customer regards a customer service robot in a store as a person. Further, in the case of a space robot, such as a humanoid robot, the robot can work in an environment that is different from its designed environment in order to perform work in different environments. Meanwhile, as a space robot or a service robot includes more technological components, an amount of information generated by the robot increases, and the amount of data generated by the robot is very large. For example, in the case of a space robot, data about the states of each robotic arm and each joint of the robot is provided, and moving images are generated

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to methods of making peptide-based compounds, and in particular to a method of making a peptide-based compound having a saccharide moiety.

2. Description of the Prior Art Proteins or peptides, which are the substrates of biological reaction, are known to be extremely important as drugs having pharmaceutical effect. With respect to peptides, the development of a practical pharmaceutical compound as a drug having practical medicinal effect has been considered to be rather difficult due to their instable in vivo conditions. Accordingly, it has been attempted to utilize the peptide's instability with the development of a pharmaceutical carrier having superior safety and stability. Particularly, the development of a pharmaceutical carrier that can stabilize a peptide by masking an amino group of a peptide in a non-toxic form is very important. However, a carrier that can satisfy such a requirement has not been developed yet, and there is no report about the development of an aminocyclitol-based carrier. Korean Patent Publication No. 10-1996-0179882 discloses a peptide-based compound having a cyclic structure, wherein the compound is prepared by using an iminocyclitol. However, the compound of the aforementioned patent publication does not include a saccharide moiety and is not necessarily useful as a pharmaceutical carrier. Under such circumstances, the present inventors have conducted a series of research on the development of a compound capable of inhibiting peptidase and binding to proteins by masking a substrate of peptidase at the amino acid, and on the development of a pharmaceutical carrier that can mask the amino group of a peptide while in vivo for a long period of time by containing the compound as an active ingredient. As a result, it has been found that the aforementioned problems can be solved by providing a method of making a peptide-based compound having a saccharide moiety. The present inventors have also found that the compound can
