I purchased Windows 10 Home and completed a fresh-install (complete reinstallation) of Windows, only that it installed Windows 10 Home instead of Professional. I'm guessing this is due to the Windows 8 Standard Edition serial key preinstalled in the BIOS. The backup of the "Files.ini" file to the disk "%APPDATA%" is made every time an update of the files is made, causing in the "%APPDATA%" folder a hidden file containing the data of the previous update. Click the Import button when you are prompted for information such as the password and whether the key is a complete chain or a single file. Once the data is imported, you will be prompted to complete the certificate request. Choose Complete Certificate Request. As mentioned above, the Hacktool:Win32/Keygen tool allows users to "crack" (illegally register) various software. It simply forges activation keys/license files to trick programs into believing that they are activated. This tool itself is not harmful (other than it diminishes the revenue of software developers), but is often distributed together with viruses. I have been testing a version of the product that allows you to scan files on Windows based devices. Unfortunately I was very disappointed. This is one of the many reasons I was reluctant to purchase. I still purchased a version that I can try the features. Yeah, it was pretty crazy. This was only an hour before or two hours before. I was just minding my own business, I was driving, and he jumped out from his car with a baseball bat and all that type of stuff.
