It has been in Alpha testing for a long time, but I'm getting to the point where I think that it is ready for a public release. What I need: It's time to open the Sourceforge project. In order for people to look over it and give it a go, I need to get it in shape to be published. Right now the code is a mass of dead branches that just do what they are

Customizable keybindings (system-wide). The old-school way to change keybindings, while not as flexible as a dynamic list editor, is still easy, and allows for a clean and undisturbed state. Themes include: A lot of people noticed that there's a lot of requests for a randomizer. Probably one of the most requested feature that is missing in MSW is the ability to randomly change the desktop wallpaper. The now popular change random wallpaper feature is one of my personal favorites, but I'm always afraid I'll mess up and want to use an image I don't like, so I made this wallpaper application. FEATURES: * Random background and hotkeys * Customize the background using GIMP * Preview the background before randomizing * Easy to use interface * Works in all major desktop environments KNOWN BUGS: * Some version of GIMP is needed to be able to use the preview feature Requirements: * ImageMagick, GIMP * GIMP * PICKCACHE * QT * KDE (But the only one supported is qtCurve, but for gtk, there's the gtk-chtheme and gtk-chtheme-engine) Dependencies: * GIMP * GIMP depends on ImageMagick. Installation: * Download and extract the archive. * Install PICKCACHE and QT (only for gtk). * Install GIMP (only for gtk). * Type gimprun and pick the directory where you wish to have the images stored * Open the program and choose the directory. * Add your favorite images and/or configure the hotkey, set it to "random" (use "/" and /") or "set interval" (use "!" and ".") * Press "randomize" and choose an interval. * (Optional) Configure the image size and the preview mode: * Set the image size in pixels. * Choose the preview mode: * Use the percentage of your desktop's display. * Use the maximum width and height. * Use both the maximum width and the maximum height. * Use the thumbnail (best option). * Choose a color for the background. * You can also choose the random color by using either the autorandom colors or a color picker. 2edc1e01e8

According to the campaign, Mr. McCain has recited more than 14,000 campaign speeches, saying it is his longest campaign. He has appeared on at least 1,400 television stations, according to his campaign. And he has traveled the length and breadth of the nation, rarely missing a chance to tell the story of his military service or to highlight his stands on issues from economics to the war on terrorism. His campaign also said Mr. Obama was trying to cram his policy positions into speeches on a single day, as he did at the Democratic convention. "On the other hand," the campaign said, "John McCain has given more than 15,000 speeches." When Mr. Obama recently turned in his nomination speech, it was the closest he had ever come to talking about the war in Iraq. The longest speech he has given was for a three-hour address in 2002 on race in America, and that was never intended for the audience of supporters who greeted it with the biggest applause. "It is a very deliberate decision, a strategic decision, to just concentrate on domestic issues, and leave the foreign issues to other people," the former senator and vice president, Joseph R. Biden Jr., told a group of Democratic donors at a fund-raiser last month. "And he's going to make foreign policy. He's going to make it the same way he made domestic policy — not with a lead hand." Several of Mr. Obama's most influential advisers have been trying to persuade him to spend more time talking about what he would do as president, though they recognize that is almost an impossible task in a general election campaign. Mr. Obama's aides acknowledge that he has given fewer foreign policy speeches than Mr. McCain and has not said much about the war in Iraq. But they do say that he does not need to talk about Iraq, and that he will make other foreign policy speeches to increase his knowledge of the world and his ability to give a command of it when he becomes president. It was Mr. Obama's first speech in the year 2000, when he was campaigning for the Illinois state legislature, that ended up being his best foreign policy speech. It was a sober, substantive address, in which he laid out a vision of foreign policy
